The Trouble in Marriage about Closeness & Remoteness—& the Aesthetic Answer

UNDERSTANDING MARRIAGE!—A CLASS OPEN TO ALL WOMEN

The Saturday, June 11th class will address a matter at the very heart of married life: The Trouble in Marriage about Closeness & Remoteness—& the Aesthetic Answer.

Wonderfully informative and spirited discussions take place at the Understanding Marriage! classes, and on June 11th these sentences from Eli Siegel's Preface to his essay The Ordinary Doom will be taken up:

The large inward catastrophe of today is: We let ourselves be pleased by and do what we can to please a person we still want to hide from, we still do not fully respect. The one way we can fully respect a person is to feel that that person deserves wholly to know us and it would be good for us to know that person.

To know a person is to know the universe become throbbingly specific. It is always the universe on two feet, with two eyes, and an articulate mouth. It is the universe we want to skip.

What women will learn can make for truer, fuller closeness between husband and wife—a feeling of love and romance the likes of which they haven't known before!
